

"This season, more than ever before, it will be wise for the customer to look where he's going."—Haberdauber.

Reliable and dependable clothing such as we sell will not be found in every store.

A lot of poor cloth has been made and put on the market this season.

SAFETY FIRST—buy where you know your money will be returned if any clothing disappoints you.

For men and boys, here is the right stuff.

We Are Prepared

It seems to be the general opinion that all good merchandise is going to be much higher in price this coming season, and we wish to say such is not the case with us. We have bought more goods for this season (have them in our store to-day) than for several years and the prices are the same as before, except on very few items, such as Overalls, that we could not purchase ahead.

We do advise early buying, as it is very hard to find desirable goods in the market to-day, for at once delivery.

You can come to us for your Clothing, Shoes, Hats and Furnishings, expecting as good values and service as ever, and you'll get it. If not, your money back for the asking.

It seems that the U. S. secret service agents searching for evidence of alleged hyphenated collusion some months ago were not so far off the track when they directed their steps to Burlington, Vt.

In her recent primary, Michigan engaged in the favorite pastime of patting a "favorite son" on the shoulder but didn't get anywhere as far as expressing real presidential preference is concerned.

The fact that in Vermont the brilliant F. H. Babbitt of Bellows Falls will not oppose State Auditor Graham for the Republican nomination for governor would seem to ensure the success of the latter's candidacy.—Concord (N. H.) Monitor.

Perhaps Mr. Graham's assurance of victory is what kept Mr. Babbitt out of the race at the present time.

THE GERMAN CHANCELLOR'S PROTESTATIONS.

It is difficult to reconcile the assertions of Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg before the German Reichstag with the facts as they exist. The German chancellor declares that Germany is "fighting for her existence," such words conveying the impression that Germany is on the defensive, has her back to the wall, her hands liable to seizure; and yet Germany carried the war into as many as six different nations and now has her clutches fastened on those territories. The chancellor asserted that Germany "is not fighting for possession of foreign soil"; and yet the first act of Germany at the outbreak of the war was to overrun a small, weak nation which possessed a seacoast which Germany coveted, instead of first attacking the great nation to the eastward, whose aggressions we have been led to believe Germany feared—the Slav peril. Why didn't Germany first wage war on Russia, whose refusal to demobilize was the ostensible cause for the entry of Germany into the Austria-Serbia imbroglio? "Our aim," continued the chancellor, "is the lasting rescue of the European continent, which is now shaken to its very foundations." Shaken by what, one might ask, if not by Germany herself? Again, the chancellor declared that the entente allies are to be loaded with the burden of responsibility for continuing, as well as for starting the war; and yet the German phalanxes are even now launching one of the mightiest offensives known in history in an effort to break down the defenses on the road to Paris so that the Prussian military power might throttle a nation that would have continued to dwell in peace with Germany. Even as the chancellor was speaking Germany was killing women and children in Great Britain under the guise of acts of war and was plunging neutral ships to destruction without warning. And still, the German chancellor says that on the shoulders of the entente allies will rest the terrible responsibility for the war.

The chancellor was speaking for home consumption; his words—such words—never will hoodwink the neutral world.
